Hawaii Association of International Buddhists warmly welcomes members of the community to a peer-led discussion among Buddhist practitioners from Generation X, Millennials, and Gen Z.

Key questions to be addressed: Are the teachings of the Buddha and various Buddhist traditions relevant to contemporary American life? Does the Dharma provide practical tools to help navigate personal decision-making in areas of career, relationships, sex, diet, substance use, education, travel, technology, and creative activity? How do the teachings and the examples of prior generations inspire proactive engagement with greed, hatred, and delusion that are manifest in American political, social, and economic culture? How can established Dharma communities support practitioners and non-practitioners in co-creating a culture of awakening?
